

USL secures ISO14001 certification

Universal Sealants, trading as BridgeCare, StructureCare, Nufins and Visul are pleased to announce the successful certification of ISO 14001 to our ever-growing accreditations as recognition of our high standards of practice alongside the ISO 9001 quality management certificate.

Our overriding objective at Universal Sealants is to promote environmental protection and avoid environmental impacts in harmony with economic, social and political requirements. The implementation within the company is not a one off or static process, but calls for constant adaptations and changes in the interest of a continual improvement process.

Our aim was to achieve certification by early 2011 and subsequently set up a dedicated environmental team, created and established an environmental management system, implemented our environmental policy, manual, procedures, reporting forms and audit plan, as well as training staff on new procedures and how they could make a difference to the environmental impact of the company.

Assessment was carried out by BM Trada who audited the implementation of the environmental management system throughout the company, environmental performance, waste management, and environmental compliant and incident reporting at a number of Universal Sealants locations. This was to ensure the company's environmental policies and procedures were in place and that staff were environmentally aware.

Colin Laing, Environmental Manager said "I am delighted we have achieved this standard and shows we have the right processes in place to be a responsible organisation and community partner"
